2. APNs of patients in the hospital at the field included: 71 454, assigned to the Wittstock kommandatura on Roebeler Strasse; 78 581, belonging to a soldier stationed in Techlin-Laerz (II 54/U 33) who wore a clasp representing an open parachute, and who said that he had been awarded the clasp for ten parachute jumps; 30 110, assigned to a unit stationed in Techlin-Laerz; 15 534, belonging to a soldier at the field who was quartered in the headquarters building, formerly occupied by the airport company; and 13 712 K and 13 712 m (?), both assigned to the Wittstock hospital. (3)
3. A fragment of a letter was found at the hospital. The letter was addressed to Viktor Romanchikov of Unit APN 21 369 E in Bolotovo (?) and sent by P. Populli from Grodno, White Russian S.S.R., 2 Soviet Square. (3)
4. The radar set was still 100 meters west of the garages. It was not in operation on the days of observation. Two single-core cables, strung on poles, led from the radar set to the former kommandatura building, now housing the switchboard of the field. The cables passed through a window into the house. Two outgoing single-core (einadrig) telephone cables were seen passing through the same window. They were also strung on poles and led to a dug-in truck, which was permanently occupied. One officer and three soldiers wearing blue service color were seen at the truck. They did not wear branch-of-service insignia. Two single-core telephone cables led from the truck to the former German telephone bunker east of the hospital. The noise of a small motor was repeatedly heard from this bunker which was permanently guarded by an air force soldier. (4)
